BOULEVARD

BOULEVARD

The Formosa Boulevard station in Taiwan is made up of a large stained-glass window called the 'Dome of Light' in honour of the birth of Taiwanese democracy. With 4,500 glass panels wrapping 2,180 square meters, the dome is divided into different quadrants that represent the cosmos life cycle, the humanity and the history of the country. This collection reminds us so much of this station, a true ode to colour.

La estación Formosa Boulevard situada en Taiwán está formada por una gran vidriera de numerosos colores llamada la 'Cúpula de la luz' en honor al nacimiento de la democracia taiwanesa. Con 4.500 paneles de cristal envolviendo 2.180 metros cuadrados, la cúpula se divide en diferentes cuadrantes que representan el ciclo de vida del cosmos, la humanidad y la historia del país. Esta colección nos recuerda tanto a esta estación, una verdadera oda al color.

A close-up, low-angle shot of the Formosa Boulevard station's stained-glass dome. The image focuses on the intricate patterns and vibrant colors of the glass panels, which are arranged in a grid-like structure. The colors range from deep blues and purples to bright yellows and reds, creating a rich, textured surface. The perspective looks upwards towards the center of the dome, where the light filters through the glass, creating a bright, dappled effect on the surrounding surfaces.

COLORFUL LINES

Petrol blue, turquoise, coral, dark green, white shine, black shine, grey and beige. A chromatic fan designed to explore the creative side of each project. Combined, together but not in each other's pockets, back and forth... The possibilities to give a unique touch to each space are infinite...

'No limits, no rules'.

Azul petróleo, turquesa, coral, verde oscuro, blanco brillo, negro brillo, gris y beige. Un abanico cromático pensado para explorar el lado creativo de cada proyecto. Combinados, juntos pero no revueltos, del derecho del revés... Las posibilidades para darle un toque único al cada espacio son infinitas...

"No limits, no rules".
